Dear General:
STATINTL

[REDACTED] came in to see me, and he not only presented an interesting situation for study, but I liked his approach.

Apparently you had made him understand that a little of enlisted life and some military training is not a bad thing and he seems more than willing to take things as they come. However, he is qualified by education for intelligence work, and I believe we have some responsibility to see that the best use is made of his talents either by the Army or ourselves.

Consequently, I have presented the case to our training people in connection with their long-range program and they are very interested in it as a test case. I explained this to [REDACTED] who seemed satisfied.

STATINTL

Very truly yours,

LAWRENCE R. HOUSTON
General Counsel
